All eyes in downtown's Arts District were on new neighbor Angel City Brewing, which staged a three-day grand (re)opening in honor of their move from Torrance's Alpine Village.

Brewmaster-owner Michael Bove celebrated Angel City Brewing's move from Torrance's Alpine Village to downtown's Arts District with a three-day grand opening. He and staffers poured from kegs of Angel City beer, and outside, brother Matthew Bove manned the charcoal grill, cooking tri-tip and bratwurst, and the on-site art gallery was in full effect. The space, located at 216 South Alameda Street, will also eventually house a beer and wine store, an outdoor biergarten and an event space for live music.

Angel City Ale, Angel City Lager, Angel City Vitzten (hefeweizen) and Charlie Parker (a hoppy pale ale) were all available. Bove's a longtime saxophone player and has named more than one beer for jazz greats, saying, "Charlie Parker and Lester Young are the yin and yang of saxophone." With more space, he'll now have the capacity to produce one-off beers that won't be available anywhere else, including barrel-aged batches and sour ales. Bove will begin brewing new batches in April, city willing. [The Feast]
